MLA Electronic Source Citation Guide

As you research, keep track of the following information on all of the material you find online, whether it comes from More to Explore or elsewhere. Any evidence, ideas, or phrases that you get from an author other than yourself must be cited. In this way, careful citations preserve your honest intellectualism by giving credit where credit is due. Your essay will represent your own personal perspectives on the issues, but any information or perspective you gain from an outside source needs to be made clear to your reader.

Here’s a list of information you might need for your citations. Not every web source will provide all of this information, but collect everything you can if it’s available:

- The name of the article
- The name of the author and any other contributors, such as editors
- The title of the website
- Any information about the date the material was posted online
- Any information about when the material was originally published
- The date you accessed the material

Most of the articles in this unit are from web magazines. For a web magazine, provide the author name, article name in quotation marks, title of the web magazine in italics, publisher name, publication date, medium of publication, and the date of access. Remember to use n.p. if no publisher name is available and n.d. if no publishing date is given. Ask your teacher if there are any online citation sites that would be appropriate for you to use as a guide.
